California Newsboy Lost Nothing by Trusting to the Honesty of His Customers.

Most people are honest; so, at least reasons a newsboy in a California town, and he has clear justification for his confidence. The reporter of the following incident was in a downtown drug store when a stranger came in with a copy of a newspaper, and asked change for a dime. He said that he wanted to pay for his newspaper. Someone remarked that for his part he let the newsboys find their own change

"This newsboy cannot do it," said the man with the newspaper. "Come out here and look at him." Two or three bystanders stepped to the door, expecting to see a crippled boy with a pile of newspapers to sell. Instead, they saw a tin can with a hole in the top large enough to admit a nickel; a pile of newspapers lying upon the walk, and a card fastened to the can reading:

"Gone to Sunday school for one

The can and pile of newspapers stood unprotected on the walk for more than an hour, while their little owner was at Sunday school. Men who passed by and were attracted by the rather odd little news stand would stop, read the sign, pick up a paper and put a nickel-and sometimes a dime-into the little tin can. When the boy returned from Sunday school he found all his newspapers gone, and more nickels in the tin can than there were papers when he left .- Youth's

UNDER A WAR STAMP

By ELSIE GRUHL MARTIN.

Every time Earl Hosmer thought of the fair young girl with whom and her father he had passed a pleasant month abroad, his heart stirred with-in him. They had been nothing more than friends, but she had made the impression of his life upon him. thought of how genial and friendly the father and daughter had been to him, of their present distressing con-dition, of their friendlessness and poverty in a foreign land, appealed to the best instincts of his loyal nature.

They were wealthy people, the Durivages, but Earl as well had an abundance of worldly means. He had a business to attend to, and going abroad just now meant something serious for its interests, but he was willing to make the sacrifice.

When Earl reached his office he sat down to think out his plans for an immediate departure. While he was ar ranging in his mind all the details, the office boy brought in the afternoon mail. Earl flipped the letters over carelessly. Then his face flushed up and his eyes took to their depths a rare token of interest. From postmark and handwriting he knew at once the source of one of the letters "It is from Elsa-from Miss Durivage!" he breathed eagerly, and opened it. The letter was a brief, ordinary missive, as if written between acquaint ances. It gave an address in the far away war-beleaguered city. It told of no particular effect of the war. There was nothing in the letter that would not pass the most critical cen-

There was a postscript to the letter and it greatly puzzled Earl. It read: "The war stamp on this letter is probably quite a curiosity in Amer-You might soak it off, for they will be scarce after a while, and it is quite a memento to preserve."

"Of course, I will save it," murmured the ardent Earl, thinking of the dainty lips that had touched the insensible piece of paper, and he proceeded to follow instructions.

"Why-there is writing under the stamp!" exclaimed Earl, and with distending eyes he read the words: "We are penniless and starving."

In a flash Earl Hosmer read the oracle. The letter had been written in a noncommittal way that had passed with the censor. Elsa had used the war stamp to conceal a message telling of the real situation in the district from which she wrote.

It required no further thought for Earl to arrive at a speedy decision. The evening train bore him eastward, and two days later he was on the ocean, bound for the continental war center

Within two hundred miles of the city that held his beloved, the progress of the ardent Earl was blocked. He had with him a large amount in proceed thus far without much difficulty. Now a broad stretch of disputed and war-ravaged territory lay tination.

long, anxious waiting was brought to a close. Passing a house wrecked by a shell in the little town where he was staying, Earl heard a faint wailing voice. He investigated, to discover a little four-year-old girl lying ten feet down in the dismantled cellar where she had fallen.

Her arm was broken, she was well nigh exhausted with cold and starvation. He managed to learn from her where she lived. When he restored her to her frantic parents he found that she had been missing for two days.

The gratitude of the poor parents was genuine. The father chanced to mention that he was one of some fifty wagon men who were to carry some wounded soldiers to the city where the Durivages were. He was to bring up the rear with five days' prowisions. It did not take Earl long to decide that here was his opportunity to reach his beloved.

He had an understanding with the shielded corner of the enclosed wagon.

How his heart beat with suspense and then sorrow as he finally reached his journey's end! The Durivages were sheltered in a poor hovel and secure the bare necessities of life.

The wagon man was to return to neutral ground with his vehicle, and Earl and the Durivages were smuggled through in his vehicle.

"To think of that dreadful past!" "Oh, what a messenger of joy and June 15th and call hope you have been!" A messenger of love as well. The moon was smiling down, the stars twinkled, the gentle breeze breathed only of peace. He told her all that was in his heart, and she kissed the lips that spoke those precious words.

He Was Surprised. "You learn much by travel."

"How now?" The streets of Boston surprised me. They are just like the streets of other

SPUR OF OTHERS' GOOD WORK

Admiration of Talent One Does Not Possess Keeps Up Mental and Spiritual Activity.

It seems a strange part of our human nature that we so often admire most the talent we do not possess, remarks the Milwaukee Journal. The singer thinks no art so great as painting; the painter may put the highest value on literary ability, while the author's ideal may be architecture. Yet this is undoubtedly a wise provision of nature tending to our growth. If we never saw anything beyond our present attainments, something to which we would fain reach out, we should live in grooves. The ruts in our life would be so deep there would be no getting out of them to the free spaces. People would grow away from each other; the social life would lose its flavor. It is seeing things to admire in others that keeps up our mental and spiritual activity. The life of a hermit does not really tend either to holiness or progress; it is not a life of usefulness. In such seclusion one may win a certain sort of content, but it is the content of a living death.

We need to see things beyond our present reach to make us strive. We need the spur of others' good work to keep us to our best,
